In early April 1956, Kurt LAHR, in charge of LFV Section II/C, Rheinland-Pfalz, revealed that he was looking for a house in Mainz, where his duty-station is located. LAHR stated that he wanted to move his family of six from his home in Koblenz, that his wife was getting tired of having him in Koblenz only on weekends, and that it was extremely hard for her to look after the five children. LAHR maintained a furnished room in Mainz during weekdays, travelling home to Koblenz on weekends. He gave the impression of being rather desperate and even hinted that his wife had threatened him with divorce if he did not remedy the situation. LAHR has four sons and two daughters. His eldest son, who is seventeen years old, presently is serving aboard a ship as a sailor and wants to become a career merchant marine officer. In early May 1956, LAHR stated that he had solved his housing problem. On approximately 1 August 1956 he will move his family to a six-room apartment located at Mainz, Am Kaestrich 1. He also mentioned that he had sold his Borgward Diesel passenger car and had bought a new DKW Tudor.
